Conversation Skills

Essential communication skills for successful job experiences

Workers with developmental disabilities often lose jobs and experience other social problems because of poor conversation skills and subsequent isolation. Conversation Skills, by speech and language therapist Dr. Marilyn Banks, covers basic and essential communication skills and helps young people enjoy successful job experiences and more fulfilling and independent social lives. It turns its participants into high-soaring, independent leaders in the art of conversation with two books that provide basic conversation skills to individuals with developmental disabilities and show them how to initiate social interactions. With 50-plus self-managed lessons, Conversation Skills is self-paced and takes only 12 weeks of biweekly, 10-minute training sessions during which individuals acquire a ready social repertoire. All materials in the book are reproducible. Conversation Skills II teaches individuals how to remember names, develop friendships at work and in the community, and extend conversations beyond a one-answer response.

Focus on preparing for a job interview

Workers regularly lose jobs because of difficulties in social situations that inevitably arise in job settings. Difficulties in communicating and maintaining appropriate appearance often are the largest barriers to securing and maintaining employment for young adults. Clients need more than information and tips about how to behave on the job. They need to have ample opportunity to experience and practice steps which lead to a successful job experience. The basic skills for success in the job interview are the same core skills for success in the work setting. The Get a Job Curriculum addresses these skills by preparing the client for the job interview.
